Reflexivism and Deconstruction in Post-modernism

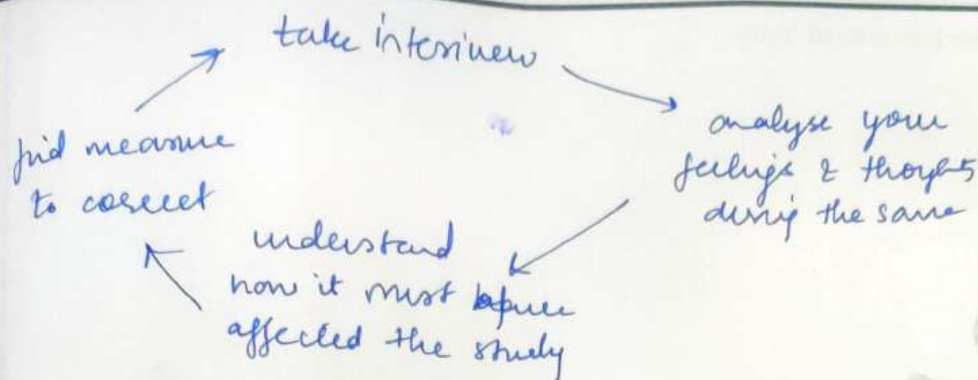

Post modernism is a school of thought emerged in 1960s as a response to the mode of ethnographs.

Clifford & James Clifford gives the concept of Systematic Skepticism where he says how the inherent biases of ethnographers are sure to reflect on the ethnograph making to which an unbiased culture study is Skeptic.

Renetto Rosaldo says how he was on a head hunter's rage in Ilongo while he was in his own rage of wife's death.

Thus postmodernism suggests two methods to address this issue :-

1) Reflexivity: here the anthropologist is to acknowledge his own cultural inclinations & biases while analysing.

2) Deconstruction: This method asks for banishing the undisputed loyalty towards one single idea. (Ex: men are women, right over touch etc). Thus this method calls for understanding ^{all} ~~both~~ point of views to build a holistic picture of culture.

Significance:

- 1) More accurate ethnographs possible
- 2) Objectivity & empiricity is improved if not perfect.

Thus the field of neo-ethnography has caused another substantive way difference in recording ethnographs ever since Malinowski's Participant Observation.
