5.c) Subculture and Contraculture

While the individual units making up culture [e.g. Indian spiritualism made of sub culture of Yoga] is subculture, contraculture are elements that don't integrate well into entire cultural complex.

Using R. Benedict's patternation of culture, breaking down culture into subunits allows us to determine whether each unit is harmonious or dysharmonious. [E. leach] in [Polya: A Village in Ceylon] sees how many sub units of culture fuse to make the larger culture complex.

Components of subculture

- ① must have independent existence
- ② vegetarianism as cultural tradition within materialist eating pattern
- ③ must be diffusible - borrow & adapt to other parts of culture

Contraculture refers to elements that may seem to be dysharmonious fit.

② In institution of marriage culture of open-marriage i.e., open sexual activity not restricted to marital partner will strain the institution of marriage.

Because G.P. Murdock (Social Structure, 49) believes, sexual monopoly is a prerogative of marriage.

Hence, culture & contra culture evolve hand in hand within the larger processes of diffusion, leading to dynamic changes to cultural institutions.
