(a) Cultural shock

(10 Marks)

Cultural shock is the feeling of disbelief or 'shock' that occurs when a person of one culture experiences the traits of another culture.

Eg. During height of colonialism, British experienced cultural shock witnessing many tribal cultures.

Cultural shock can give positive or negative reactions in an individual. For the British colonialists, cultural shock gave an ethnocentric feeling. This led to the advent of foundational school of anthropological thought - classical evolutionism.

The negative reaction towards cultural shock may cause severe mental stress to the individual. This is due to the incompatibility of person's culture and the new culture he experiences. Eg. Tribes when experiencing modern cultures undergo extreme mental stress like Yanamomos of Brazil.

Cultural shock may also lead to assimilation of culture due to voluntary or forced diffusion of culture. It may also lead to ~~degradation~~ degradation of enculturation process.

Due to contemporary globalisation, cultural shock is experienced by many individuals especially intra-national and international migrants. The ill effects of cultural shock can be mitigated by appreciating diversity and following cultural relativism.
