(d) Enculturation and Transculturation.

(10 Marks)

Enculturation: It is the process by which a child is taught the customs, traditions of that culture by people of that culture, usually by family.

Eg. Mother teaching to the child

Child learning from grandparents.

Transculturation is learning and experiencing the customs and traditions of other cultures. This occurs due to migration, diffusion etc.

Enculturation occurs in childhood whereas transculturation can occur at any stage of life. Enculturation is done, usually, by kinship while transculturation can occur from friends, teachers, workplace colleagues, classmates etc.

Enculturation is a very important phase in a child's life as he/she gets to inculcate the customs of home culture. Transculturation can, however, occur many times in his/her life expanding the cultural horizon.

Due to contemporary familial relations, enculturation has seen lesser role due to reasons like nuclearization of family, working nature of both parents etc. This leads to increasing importance of transculturation in a person's life due to increasing diffusionary and migratory patterns.
