

1.c) Household and domestic group

Household and domestic groups are a type of residential groups which include individuals and families interacting in a particular pattern.

Household → W.A. Haviland (2003) has defined households as residential groups with common hearths where individuals or members of household may not be necessarily related.
 eg) Friends sharing a flat compose a household.

Domestic group → Domestic groups involve shared means of production but the consumption units are different.
 eg) Polygynous family living adjacently

Life cycle of domestic group

- Stage of expansion - Starts with marriage, birth of child
- Stage of dispersion - Starts with marriage of older child
- Stage of ^{re}placement - The original elders get replaced as children take their roles.

Similarities between household and domestic group

1) Both are types of residential groupings related to family.

2) Both involve certain economic activities and sharing of resources.

3) Both help in understanding nature of families.

Differences

1) Household may include him or not but domestic group includes him.

2) Household may have shared production or not but domestic group has shared production.

3) The rules of household may be very lax if it involves friends but rules of domestic groups are similar to a family.

Try to quote cast study of AM Shah.

(Radha / Vandana)
He says family can be many households

The household and domestic groups, both help in understanding interactions in a society & patterns of social organisation.

Conclusion
↓
families are ideological grouped whereas household & domestic group are grounded realities.

5/10