Q7. The impact of globalization on indigenous peoples has been complex and multifaceted, ranging from economic and political marginalization to cultural commodification and appropriation. Elaborate. (15 marks)

As per Anthony Giddens, globalisation refers to gradual integration of societies, their cultures and economies.

It has led to contact of indigenous economic systems with multiple forces like

This has led to changes in economic structures of indigenous people →

Decline in hunter gatherers, pastoralists, shifting cultivators, traditional cultivators, local artisans

eg. Chenchu - Hunters, Artisan like Asurs

Increase in landless labor, ~~cash~~ industrial labor, ~~eg~~ menial jobs

Also slight increase in white collar job holders, administration job holders
eg. Meena

Case Studies

① Maukidias of Orissa [Jayanta Kumar, 2014]

↳ Traditionally, monkey catchers, globalisation has made them nomads and industrial labor as their lands have been encroached upon

② Asura case [Gadgil and Guha]

↳ Loss demand of their craft to global industrial cheap products

③ Case of Narmada [Divya Trivedi, 2017]

↳ Welspun has taken 16000 ha of land of Bhils and Gujjars → once settled cultivators of that land leading to loss of years old economic and cultural life of land which they had cultural affinity to

↳ From this → cultural commodification has been there due to increased contact with culture contact. Political marginalisation due to alien policy and lack of awareness

Case Study

① Traditional knowledge is being passed on only since generations is being lost due to the dying linguistic diversity.

of Tanyans of Anunachal - only 100 speakers left

GoD Day - when a language dies, a world view dies with it.

② Acts like FRA, PESA have benefited many sections but due to lack of awareness and complex procedures → they have failed in true empowerment.

Thus, globalisation has disrupted their traditional lives. Although some tribes like the Apatani of Anunachal have also benefited from it, majority have faced its wrath.

Way Ahead should be to follow Nelson's landmark policy of integration.
