Market is the place of exchange of goods and services found in both modern and primitive economies. However, their functioning differs.

Market economies uprooted tribal economies -

- ① Replacement of tribal markets with modern malls.
- ① Principle of maximization is followed opposite to the generalized reciprocity of tribals.
- ① Influx of cash economy and individualism of tribals have led to decline in market and trade of tribals.

modern economies have been amalgamated into tribal economy.

Case study: Edmund Brooke on Naandi and Bushman

∴ they have adopted 'dual economy', where use of both traditional economic ties and modern cash economy.

Also, MN Srinivas says in his book
'The Tribal Culture of India' tribals used to send money to their home and also follow traditional customs in urban areas.

further, Dr Majumdar also says

Thus, it can be said that as Amartya Sen's income approach highlights there is interdependence and close amalgamation between economies and economies of primitive society.
