

Redistribution in contemporary society.

(10 Marks)

Karl Polanyi (1944) defined Reciprocity, Redistribution and market exchange as primary modes of exchange. Though societies have changed, these modes hold contemporary relevance.

Redistribution

It is defined as the act of pooling mechanism where resources are collected by a central authority and are then redistributed.

[Ex] Pottlatch in Kwakwaka'wakw.

- (i) Found in Ranked / Stratified societies.
- (ii) One which is divided into haves and have nots.

→ Redistribution in its new form is also found in contemporary societies.

(iii) Carries an element of social welfare.

Contemporary Society

① Global Level: Resource collection and ~~also~~ allocation by bodies like WHO, IMF, WTO.

② National Level: Public Distribution System (PDS) and Welfare Schemes.

③ Societal Level: SHGs and other Charitable Trusts.

④ Individual Level: Collection and distribution by Politicians or Influential personalities.

→ Different modes of exchange are still prevalent in forms which evolved over years of transformation.
