

(Don't Write anything in this Area)

(c) Division of Labour.

(10 Marks)

Division of labour is the way in which work is divided or distributed in a society across gender, sex, age and social status.

It differs across various societies and even across the time. It is a very dynamic concept, however, some broad patterns of division of labour across various societies can be seen:

① Hunting-gathering societies: In these societies, there is a gendered division of labour. Men usually hunt while women gather food in the forest.

② Pastoralistic societies: Depending on the societies, herding is usually done by men while women are confined to gathering and domestic work.