Q6. (a) Discuss different modes of exchange in simple societies with suitable examples 20

Since no society in world is self sufficient,
the need for exchange becomes very important.

Exchange is the give and take of goods & services in an economy.

Karl Polanyi in his book 'The Great Transformation'
(1944) gave three modes of exchange

Sahlins gave three types of reciprocity.

1) Balanced reciprocity: exchange of goods and services without use of money at face value.

$A \rightleftharpoons B$
(just equivalence)

2) Generalised reciprocity:

↳ no question of just equivalence

3) Negative reciprocity: maximum receiving and minimum giving. eg: Dowry

II. Redistribution

- It is a characteristic of stratified society
- goods are collected at common administrative center and distributed equally
- vertical distribution and one way flow of goods.

III. Trade

- i) Barter: exchange of goods and services between two parties without any exchange of medium / currency.

a) Open barter: face to face

India $\xrightarrow{\text{₹}}$ USSR
 $\xleftarrow{\text{grains}}$

b) Silent Barter: no face to face interaction

- ii) Tribal markets → weekly Haats
- Peripheral markets
(as Himalayan markets during Chaurasa)
- Annual markets
- Rampura Bushair in Himachal Pradesh
 - Jauljibi market

iii) Gift exchange : this may be ceremonial or commercial between various parties.

However, due to increasing cultural contact simple economies are facing the onslaught of modern market economy facilitated by factors like industrialisation and globalisation.
