(c) Compare and contrast the works of Radcliffe Brown and Malinowski in relation to the functional theory

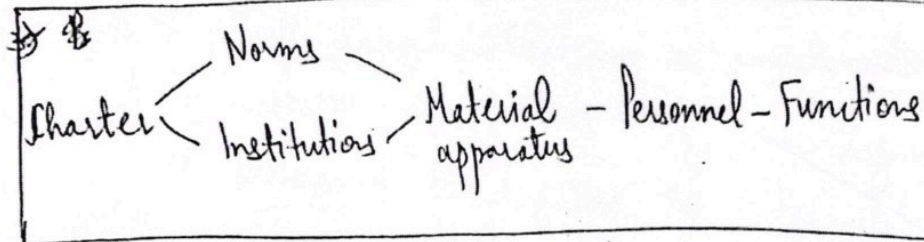

15

Functionalism is an anthropological theory that emerged in 20th century to answer 'what society is'. It emerged as a result to answer the unanswered questions by evolutionism and diffusionism.

Similarities

- 1) Both used the organ analogy to explain the process of functionalism.
- 2) Both argued that institutions in society work to ensure some functions.

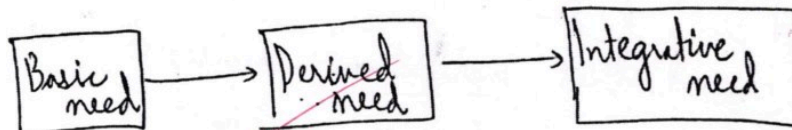

Process of functionalism

- 3) Both supported synchronic studies and opposed diachronic studies.

Differences

- 1) Malinowski conducted fieldwork among Trobian Islanders while Radcliffe Brown conducted fieldwork among Andaman Islanders (1910)
- 2) Malinowski - various institutions functions in order to serve the needs of society

Radcliffe Brown argued that institutions functions in order to maintain the social structure of society.

- 3) Malinowski focused more on culture while
R. Brown focused more on society.

- 4) ~~He~~ Radcliffe Brown tried to understand various socio-cultural laws through ~~for~~ structural functionalism unlike Malinowski.

- 5) Publications → Argonauts of Western Pacific (1922)
by Malinowski
→ The Andaman Islanders (1912)
by R. Brown.

Both of them contributed immensely to anthropology and left a rich legacy which contributed to further researches.
