1) Etic vs Emic Approach in Anthropological Research

Etic and Emic approach are derived from the words phonetics and phonemics.

Etic approach is the outsider's perspective which aims to create universal cultural categories and tries to project anthropology as a science of culture.

► : Marvin Harris Cultural Materialism uses etic approach by suggesting change in infrastructure will lead to change in structure and super-structure which will modify to maximise the mode of production and reproduction.

Emic approach is the insider's perspective which aims to view how Native's make sense of the world.

It makes use of native's cultural categories.

Ex: Harold Conklin of Cognitive

Anthropology used emic approach to study Hannuoo Color Categories and found that there color perception was based on wetness, dryness, lightness and darkness.

Analysis of approaches

Both approach have merits & demerits. Etic approach tries to achieve objectivity and presents laws of culture but may not reflect individual cultural variation. Emic approach fills the gap by trying to make sense of the lived experiences of people.

Both are widely employed in anthropology today.
